

Camping

For most campgrounds, a basic site is one that can accommodate up to 6 people (in 1 vehicle) and has a parking spot, a picnic table, and a grill or a fire ring. Other than that, the individual site won't have many other amenities and you'll need to pitch your tent directly onto an open patch of grass or gravel.

Many basic campsites allow tents, RVs, and campervans but be sure to read the driveway length to figure out the maximum vehicle size that site can accommodate. Generally, basic sites are more for tent campers, but most campgrounds will allow camping vehicles in these areas, so long as you accept that there are no hookups available.

Oh, and keep in mind that just because the campsite is "basic," it doesn't mean the campground is, too. Many developed campgrounds with toilets, shower facilities, and running water offer basic sites as a budget-friendly option, but you'll usually still have access to any other campground-wide amenities.
